

The Cotton Industry of the South.

LENGTH, 1000 FEET.

COPYRIGHTED 1908.

Cotton is used in every part of the Civilized World and the people are naturally interested in its growth and manufacture. Our Film depicts the development of the staple from the planting to the making of a sheet. The picture begins with the cotton planter's home. The cotton planter is riding to the cotton fields where colored people are picking the cotton. After the baskets filled with cotton have been weighed, the cotton is loaded on wagons and brought to the mill.

The cotton is then chopped, weeded, dried, then pressed into bales, then weighed and brought to the ships or trains to be sent to the cotton mills. The picture continues showing the exterior of the cotton mill, a very large well lighted and ventilated building.

The Janitor Falsely Accused

LENGTH, 795 FEET.

COPYRIGHTED 1908.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones leave town. They tell the janitor to take good care of the house which he promises. Two men having watched the Jones' departure take the key from the sleeping Janitor, ransack the house, depositing the goods in a push cart they brought along for this purpose. Awakening the Janitor they ask him if he wants to buy some clothing and silverware. Surprised by the cheapness of the goods, the Janitor buys some of the ware, so do also the neighbors. The burglars seeing a policeman approach quickly depart. The arrival of the telephone operator who wants to disconnect the 'phone discloses the theft. A telegram is sent to

Mr. Jones who returns at once. The telephone man is arrested. Thinking of the bargains he has seen in the Janitor's house, the policeman calls

Mr. Jones' attention to the silverware on the Janitor's sideboard. Mr. Jones recognizes it as his own and causes the arrest of the Janitor while the telephone man is released under profuse apologies. Even though protesting his innocence, the Janitor is taken to the police station just when the two thieves are brought in by another policeman. The Janitor recognizes the two men who have sold to him the silverware. He can prove his innocence and the guilt of the two men and is released from the police station. He is discharged, however, for neglect of duty as also innocent of the charge of theft he is still accused of carelessness in his duties.
